Inside The New Technology Institute in Birmingham

New HQ opens for business

With their new building open and already buzzing, The New Technology Institute in Birmingham has already welcomed hundreds of potential training course delegates and visitors.

Programme Manager Oliver Williams also stresses one of NTI's key aims: "The burgeoning media industry in the West Midlands has a healthy appetite for talented, well trained and well qualified people. The NTI in Birmingham will play an important role in developing understanding and ability in new technology and the latest programmes in the business and education sectors."

With an official opening planned for March 28th, Frank Mills, Chairman of The NTI in Birmingham and Regional Director of BT, looks forward to introducing business people in the region to a fantastic new facility.

Welcome to The NTI in Birmingham – come and meet Programme Manager Oliver Williams (top left) and NTI Apple Business Development Manager Neil Emery (above).

"The centre has two state-of-the-art IT suites, one board-room-style room plus two smaller rooms for meetings or training. These are at NTI's disposal for a wide range of training courses and available for hire in a prominent location in Birmingham city centre," he said.

Meet the team at NTI

The NTI in Birmingham team has expanded with two new additions – IT Technician Aamar Usman and receptionist Bally Panesar.

They join Programme Manager Oliver Williams, Apple Business Development Manager Neil Emery and Operations Manager Merlinda Charlery at the new NTI headquarters in Eastside.

Receptionist Bally Panesar

Bally joined NTI from the Technology Innovation Centre and she said: "Starting a new job in a brand new building is great we've been busy from day one."

IT Technician Aamar Usman

Aamar, who worked previously with Kalamazoo in Birmingham, is delighted with his new role: "It's really exciting to be able to get involved in learning and supporting new technologies. This job is a tecky's dream come true and the NTI in Birmingham's a great resource for people and businesses in the region."

Apple Week proves tasty starter - main courses to follow

The NTI in Birmingham's new premises were immediately busy when the first Apple Week was staged in January.

Designed to give delegates a taster of what they will be able to learn on full Apple certified courses, places were fully booked within a fortnight when the special week of tasters was announced.

Some 300 delegates took part and during hands-on sessions delegates learned basic to advanced editing, compositing, animation, DVD authoring and sound design techniques using Final Cut Pro, Motion, DVD Studio Pro, Shake, Sound Tracks and Logic. Final Cut Pro and Logic proved most popular.

The next 'Five Days of Apple' will run from May 8th-12th and places can be reserved by calling Neil Emery on 0121 202 4800.
